MOBILITY IN CHINA : FOLLOWING IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF THE WEST?

Chapô

Conference 9th of November, 2017

China's mobility system has been turned completely upside down since the 1980s. Large-scale public investment program in transportation infrastructure, the country's economic boom or changes in state control over travel have all contributed to the extraordinary increase in mobility. In China, the transition from the horse-drawn car to rapid modes of transportation has taken place within the span of a single generation; versus several generations in Western countries. Amazing.

How do the Chinese experience these changes in their daily lives? What impact has the mobility revolution had on their living environments? What are their dreams for the future?
